GIVE THE POOR THEIR SHARE.

The season at the Metropolitan Cperavellous quantity of tinsel, its much-praised orchestra and an array of voices which many critics wish were more praiseworthy, is about opening. The moneyed aristocracy has bought its boxes for the season, and gowns decollete, diamonds ad lib, and flowers no end are being made ready to turn the vast auditorium into a bewildering scene of life, beauty and fashion.

. Meantime, the little children cluster on the steps of the tenements all through the low districts along East River. There is no old organ-grinder with his jolly music box to set their young feet dancing and gladden their miserable little hearts. Sick children of the poor, pent in shabby dwellings, press pale faces against sooty panes and listen vainly for the cheap music, which the rich would scoff at, but which to them is the sweetest of

An Associated Press despatch says: "There a fortune of $45,000,000 awaiting in the English Courts of Chancery for a number of residents of this city."

That is the whole trouble with these English Chancery fortunes. They are what is known in baseball parlance as " magnificent waiters." But they don't seem to have motive force.

It is best, as the experience of many a man in America, hungry for sudden riches, will show, to let these fortunes do all the waiting. As for you, go about your business and make a fortune if you want one-and can

"The Evening World" Will Give Them a Merry Christmas This Year.

Contributions for the Christmas Trees Coming in Rapidly.

Public Schools Can Ald.

Five Hundred Beautiful Books Presented by a Generous Firm.

THE EVENING WORLD'S Christmas-Tree Fund continues to claim enthusiastic attention. Contributions are coming in thickly and commendation of the charity is heard on every hand. There is no citizen of New York or its sister cities who is not in full sympathy with THE EVENING WORLD in this pleasant task it has set itself, to brighten the Christmas of the poor children. There is no citizen who should not open his purse and contribute to the charity. The little folk, too, should give of their dimes which they can spare. Children can make the Christmas-Tree Fund a magnificent success if they take it earnestly in hand and determine to make the enterprise their own. In the one hundred public schools of the city there are many thousands of little ones would give if some of the more business-like would make a move by calling for subscriptions. and let every class do its best to out-contribute all other classes.

The same advice will apply to the Sunday-schools. Some of these have big Christmas trees of their own. The little ones in these schools would, no doubt, gladly forego some of their Christmas pleasures to brighten the day for the children of poverty. There are, in fact, a hundred ways in which The Eventsa WonLD Chrismas-Tree Fund could be made to reach grand proportions. Each interested individual will suggest his own way of obtaining the best result for this charity, and each will give in his own way. result for this charity, and each will give in his own way.

Besides the money contributions that have been received by THE EVERING WORLD a package of 500 Christmas books has come. This is the first donation of the kind that has been made. The following communication was received with the books:

Appreciating your noble and generous efforts for the poor children I, as a representative of the London publishing firm of Socki & Nathan, send you to-day an assortment of 500 Christinas books selected from our publications for this year. Horing that the pretty petures will please the little ones and that, like your former efforts in sid of the poor children, your Christinas Tree will be a great success,

Mixed Drinks Most Prequently Called For Over New York Bars.

Gin Fizzes, Whiskey Sours and Cocktails Have the Call.

Tastes of the Drinking Public as Analyzed by Popular Barkeepers.

'Give me a gin fizz." The speaker was a young man of scarcely twenty-five Summers, dressed in the latest and most fashionable style, and he made this request of the "Great and Only William," who has just opened a place of his own on Broadway.

opposite the Post-Office. William took a glass from behind the bar and into it squeezed the juice of half a lemon. To this he added one barspoonful of sugar and a small quantity of the liquor and then filled the glass with cracked ice, after which the decoction was well shaken.

A smaller class was produced and a diminutive amount of seltzer was dropped into the bottom. Then William carefully strained the contents of the large glass into the small one, and the drink was ready for the sportive young cus-

What is the most popular drink?" saked an Evenino World rejecter, who was present, of the man who had made the mixing and combination of liquors a study.

That is hard to say, answered William. There are several drinks that are quite jopular just now, but the trade is not confined to anything in particular. I will say, however, that the most popular drinks are limited to a small number, such-as cocktails, fizzes, milk punches, egg-nogg, whiskey sours, and what is known as "Tom Collins."

The Manhattan cocktail is rather going out, and in its place has sprung up the "Di Ronda' or Night Patrol. The Turf Club' is also quite popular, and, with due credit to our distinguished Judge, the "Martine" is having quite a call."

"Are New Yorkers not very particular as to what they shall drink?" inquired the reporter. "No.sir," answered William; "they are not. It is not usually believed here, but it is a fact that New York is way behind the age in the matter of mixed drinks.

"The fact remains, however, and anybody who has been in the West and studied the matter will tell you the same thing. Take Chicago, for instance. That city is noted for its expert barkeepers, and if you go further—to California and to New Orleans especially—you will see that the barkeepers in New York have much to learn. "Thave been here fifteen years and tried to introduce new drinks, but it is hard work. The drinking official for the world in the capacity of barkeepers a man must spend time, natience and practice in order to learn how to mix a drink for gentlemen who know; hut as a rule they don't. They simply put a few things together and pour them into a glass and serve.

"The New Yorker, being satisfied with almost anything, never utters a protest but swallows the mixture in a meek and humble manner, and goes away entirely satisfied,

"Sherry flips" are also quite popular, but fizzes are the principal mixed drinks sold. Of the latter there are so many that I can't think of them all. There's the plain fizz, the golden fizz, the silver fizz, the royal fizz, the grand royal and the great grand royal. They are made of almost any liquor, such as gin, whiskey, heardy or run.

"Have you introduced any new drinks this season?"
"No, not yet; but I have a number which I intend to introduce in the near future. They are called 'The Sicilian Daw,' Royal Sip,' Blooming Rose,' Queen of Night, 'Auld Lang Syne,' 'Brooklyn Bridge,' New York Life,' 'Le Triomphe,' 'Le Monte Blane and 'The Tower of Babel, which will be a revolution that will take the palate of the most fastidious."

"There is a popular idea," said he, "that more straight liquor is sold than anything else. I doubt if this is so, except in the poorer sections of the city. Certain I am that it is not that way here, for we sell ion mixed drinks to every drink of straight liquor."

"What is our most popular drink? Well, I should say the pousse cafe, next to that the gin fizz and then shandy gaff, followed by the claret curp. "The shandy gaff is a mixture of Bass's ale and ginger ale poured into a glass at the same

"Peachblows are made the same as a fizz, with the addition of a dash of claret to give the peachblew color. 'Champagne Cup' is also quite a swell drink, and is made the same as claret cup, with champagne substituted for claret.'

At the White Elephant Barkeeper Tom Collins was busy attending to the wants of a crowd of aborting men. When he finally got a leisure moment the reporter put the question to him. 'The most popular drink here is pousse cafe, and next to it comes gin fizz. In making pousse cafe, and next to it comes gin fizz. In making pousse cafe you can use ten cordials, though the usual number is six. First, you put a little raspbetry syrup in the glass, then some anisette, then Curacoa, and follow it with Chartreuse and crème de menthe in equal parts, and top off with blandy. This gives the glass the appearance of a barber's pole, and is quite pretty to look at. For that we charge twenty-five cents. "A drink that is extremely popular with the sports is crème de menthe, with fine ice. Whiskey sours come next and mint julieue are next in demand. It will not be long, however, before hot drinks will be all the go."

The speaker was Mr. John R. Rogers, whom the writer found at his home at 211 West 69th st.

About a century ago a rakish-looking schooner is said to have borne down to Maces Bay, which strikes in from the Bay of Fundy, on the New Brunswick coast. After some manceuving she ran into the bay and came to anchor. A boat was lowered, and with muffled oars the men pulled for the shore. The moon peeped through the clouds sufficiently bright to throw light upon the whole proceedings. The men dug a hole and buried their treasure. The bearings were taken and the boat again headed for the vessel, which was soon running out of the bay with a siff broeze after her. The men who were engaged in this business have long been dead, and the whereabouts of the treasure has been kent a secret until recently, when the chart locating it found its way into curious hands, who determined to investigate. The secret was known to two only, who a year ago went to the apot, dug up the long-hidden box, and returned it empty to its hiding-place. In evidence of their aucees it is said that one of the men has erected a fine dwelling in the suburbs of St. Stephen. They refuse to divulge their secret or to make any explanation. It is well known by Calais people that the man who has built the house was poor a short time ago. Now he seems to have plenty of money. He formerly worked as a common laborer in Calais.

THEIR HOUSE WAS AN ARMORY. Eccentricities of the Late Earl of Mount-

NEW YORK.

Cashel While Living in Canada. [SPECIAL TO THE WORLD,] LONDON, Ont., Nov. 15.-The Earl of Mount-Cashel, whose death in Ireland was announced yesterday, resided near here for ten years as the Hon, George Moore Smythe, with his father, who then held the title. He was a remarkable character. After being ousted in Ireland under the Encumbered Estates act, they immigrated here and bought a farm at Komoka.

The house was in a lonely wood, weird and picturesque. It was made the scene of wild reveiry and old-fashioned hospitality. Moore was ungainly in appearance and eccentric in manners. He usually slouched about armed with several pistols. The house itself was an armory, its rooms were decorated with guns, pistols, swords and daggers. Every door and window was riddled with bullets, the result of window was riddled with bullets, the result of their pistol practice.

The late Earl was a crack shot, and owned the pistols with hair triggers and flint locks that "Fighting Fitzgerald" used in the duel mentioned in "Charles O'Malley." They belonged to the first Earl of Mount-Cashel, grandfather of the deceased. Once in 1803, when the Sixty-third Regiment was camped at Komoka, George attempted to hit a five-cent piece at the end of his big toe and shot the toe off. Both father and son were fond of eccentric attire. It is related that when George returned to Dublin he found his father dressed in a red shirt and cowhide boots. In 1805 Moore returned to Ireland, having recovered some of the forfeited property, and in 1883 succeeded to the Earldom.

FASHIONS.

Among the special stuffs for wraps a novelty is inrec figured satin delains with a furred back. It is used sitke for jackets, capes and opera cloaks. Large Bussian coats are made of it with Oriental sleeves and bood. Another beautiful cloaking is an India cashmere with black velvet figures. Plenty of plain surface cloths are seen on the street, but all the recent styles in mantles, pelisses and cover coats are made of figured stuffs or fancy weavings in which fig leaves, folls, tendrils and orchids of the same color, but different shade, are brought out on the rough background. In the feather aigrettes put on evening bonnets plumes, ribbons and pompons are so grouped as to form a nest for some pretty little humming-bird. Muffs of velvet and lace are carried with all the handsome visiting and reception toilets Adjustable vests of Persian lamb, plucked beaver and close-cut seaskin are used on tailor-made suits for the promenades. A solitaire ruby or diamond set in a disk of white onyx makes an ideal ouff button. One of the new hair ornaments represents a mushm of small diamonds spirally hinged to a tortoise sertions and bows of narrow ribbon run and tied to stay. The colors are fast and launder like lace. Lingerie of this sort is sold in sets of three pieces at an average of $38. Love knots of gold and silver and gold and platt-num, with three spinel rubies, diamonds or sapphires buried in the loops, are designed for bracelets and lace pins, as well as for finger rings. Not a Rover.

[From the Glans Falls Republican.] Now, pa, what objection have you to Clarence? You can't say of him, as you did of Otho, that he is of a roving disposition."
"I should say not. I doubt very much if he would rove at all if I didn't unchain Moloch every night at 10."
